THE PROPOSALS

The proposed business park will be at the centre of the new Advanced Manufacturing Innovation District Scotland (AMIDS)—the only one of its kind in Scotland. AMIDS will be an internationally recognised centre for innovation, research and advanced manufacturing that supports and reinvigorates Scotland’s manufacturing capabilities across all manufacturing sectors whilst creating thousands of new jobs.

The National Manufacturing Institute for Scotland (NMIS) will be the anchor tenant of AMIDS. This industry-led centre of manufacturing expertise will bring research, industry and the public sector together to transform skills, productivity and innovation, attracting further investment.

The purpose of this planning permission in principle application is to establish the appropriateness of the proposed uses (i.e. Business Park with focus on advanced manufacturing and research & development. Other uses may include aviation, life sciences, office and other ancillary amenities and services)

To help deliver these proposals, the enabling roads, bridges and cycleways will be delivered by the Glasgow Airport Investment Area City Deal project. Planning consent is in place for the enabling works, with work expected to start on this late 2018.
